

In a company, everyone knows 5 other people. (Acquaintances are mutual.) Two members of the company are appointed captains. The captains take turns selecting members for their teams, until everyone is selected. Prove that at the end of the selection process there are the same number of acquaintances within each team.