

Newton in his famous crucial experiment (experimentum crucis) separated a beam of white light into colours by means of a prism. Then he combined the spectrum back into white light. Is it possible to form a spectrum from a beam of white light and then combine it back into white light by means of the system of prisms used as shown in the figure?

